Me: So you don't consider yourself a Pleiadian?

CM: No. We're a separate race. Our origins are Lyran and Sirian. He's a Hyadean and he's indicating that Hyades has something to do with water. Maybe in his language but not ours. Hydrate. ??? Hang on Hydrate, then "ade" is the suffix for lemonade so it does refer to something aquatic. How about that?

CM: Many of your languages are rooted in extraterrestrial dialects. Even these dialects have a common ancestor and that is Lyran and Sirian.

Me: But there are no aquatic people here on earth?

CM: There are mer people.

Me: True. So that goes against our belief that people are strictly of the land, doesn't it?

CM: Of course, you see with Sela that there are people who can fly as well. It is about genetics. Predominant characteristics come forth when one adapts to the landscape they have chosen to live upon. Or in the case of flooding, or drought, then the human will adapt in order to survive. It is about survival of the species, always.

Me: So you come from an aquatic world?

CM: Predominantly, yes. We live in shells underground.

Me: Shells? Sea shells?

CM: (laughing) No, we have homes that are built under the water and they are dry like your homes are however we can swim to the surface as we wish.

Me: Are they domed because that's what I'm thinking.

CM: They can be. They can be transparent or they can have windows with opaque walls. We love the seas and ours are clean of course, so we relate to the aquatics and the elementals. There is much greenery under the surface of the water and this keeps it clean, of course, and it provides a source of food for us.

Me: It's like living on land but wet.

CM: Exactly the same.

Me: What's your world called?

CM: It's called Llethugyth. It would be difficult for you to pronounce.

Me: Yeah it is . It sounds like lethargy.

CM: We act as fish and we act as humans. We have a very diverse life, moreso than you are capable of having.
